The "Bad Trusts."

Within the last year no less than seventeen trusts have in one way or other had serious difficulties and six of these have had to be reorganized. Poor management, over capitalization and insufficient working capital have been the causes. The capital represented amounted to $776.594.000.

this is bad for Tammany, how is it good for Low? It smacks of favored contractors. From the tax-payer's point of view, it makes little difference who gets the money; it means more debt and more interest to meet.

But let the virtuous men of Low's camp shout, proclaiming their virtues to the house-tops; the public knows them to be Pharisees. New York does not want the rule of the Pharisees longer. It prefers sin-stained Tammany. It is nearer to the plain people. The Low administration fits the men who stock their collars with wines, gamble at clubs, keep-racing stables and send their money to be bet by "commissioners." The Tammany administration fits the men who have a pail filled with beer at the side door, who have no clubs and who do patronize the pool rooms. In a great city like New York the entire gamut of morality, from low to high, can be run, and to every note struck some human being responds. Tammany grants much liberty, but it suppresses license. It does not screw up to a standard to impossible heights. It is a city government, not a reformatory institution. The New York public is weary of the pretensions of fusion; it would welcome Tammany,"

The New York public is weary of the pretensions of fusion; it would welcome Tammany.

Now who is a likely candidate? I understand the was admitted. He is the richest author in existence, and can find a hundred publishers of an era that is in the past. Thousands of men prefer to vote the Tammany itcket than that of any other organization nevertheless, they will not vote for any rag-tag and bob-tail citizen Tammany many select, whose sole recommendation is that he will be pliable and amenable to its demands. These independent Democrats desire that the Mayor shall be a man who recognizes his obligations as chief magistrate as well as a party leader. Mr. Ruppert would make an excellent Mayor and his term of office would doubtless develop good Democratic material for State and national needs.

In the parlor were sofas and chairs of mahogany and horse-hair, with a "what-not" in the corner for the curlosities and a family portrait or so and a sampler worked by some ancestress famed for her nee le. In the bedrooms were rag carpets, or none at all. The furniture in most common use was such as the country mechanic could make out of the native walnut, chestnut, cherry and poplar. Such interiors, to our more sonsuous and luxurious ags. would appear cold and uncomfortable. Behind the dwelling stood the kitchen, with its broad hearths, ovens, spits and spiders, its widemouthed enlimey, with crooks, cranes and swaying kettles. The smokehouse and the weaver's house were hard-by, and in the rear of these the cabins of the servants. In the corner of the front yard was the office, where the planter kept his books of accounts, his fishing and hunting cutift, and into which young men were crowded when the house overflowed with guests. At a distance, to the rear again and right or left, stood the stables, barns did other buildings. The lawns were neatly kept, were often large and studded with oaks or locusts.

WASHINGTON. D. C., July 11.—The Post to-morrow will say that the Harrit Lane Johnston bequest of pictures and other art objects will not be accepted by the Corcoran Art Gallery, but that it may form part of a proposed national gallery of art. Regarding the proposed national gallery the Post will say that the Board of Trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art and other patrons and lovers of art in this city, New York, Boston and other centers have planned to go before Congress at its next session and ask for an appropriation for the establishment of a national gallery of art. The bill, according to the Post, will be introduced in the House by a member from Now York, who will himself give for the maintenance of the gallery a sum in excess of $1,000,000.

The Post will say that within the past week J. Pierpont Morgan has had several conferences with a prominent citizen of Washington and an officer of the Corcoran Gallery looking to the transfer of his entire collection of pictures and other works of art to the proposed national gallery.

STAUNTON, VA. July 11.—Dr. J. Shelton Horseley, of El Paso, Tex., accompanied by his family, arrived in the city yesterday and is now the guests of his brother-in-law, Hon. A. C. Braxton, on East Main Street.

For many years Dr. Horseley has been at the head of St. Luke's Surgical Hospital, in El Paso, Texas, where he has gained a wide reputation as a most skilful and successful surgeon.

Dr. Horseley has been recently elected to a professorship in the Medical College of Virginia, and as a member of the staff of the new memorial hospital, in Richmond, which is said to be the best equipped hospital in the South. Next week he will go to Richmond, where he will hereafter be permanently located.

The X-Ray Waist.

The X-Ray Waist.

"Oh, gee—look at the X-ray shirt-waist!" remarked a young man on State Street the other afternoon. It was in the thick of the crowd, but I had no difficulty in picking out the X-ray blouse. The irreverent chap, still in his teens, had spied it and was making comments for the benefit of the rest of the procession. The waist was made of transparent laws and lace insertion. Through this filmy covering one saw a corset cover made of embrodery and olaborately trimmed with narrow blue ribbon. Above the edge of this peeped a pink undervest, which contrasted with the brunette skin of the wearer, and faintly outlined across the back was the edge of a dark corset. No X-ray ever brought to light more amusing revelations.

Other women wear X-ray shirt-waists, who died in his place of business, No. 712 East Cary Street, took place at 439 of this peeped a pink undervest, which of this peeped a pink undervest, which contrasted with the brunette skin of the contrasted with the brunette skin of the wearer, and faintly outlined across the back was the edge of a dark corset. after forty years of "oppression in the South" since the emancipation proclamation, only about one twentleth of the more than 6,00,000 negroes of the country took refuge among their "friends" in the eighteen leading Northern and Western States of the Union.

This brings to mind a case in point. Some years ago, John Jones carried on a butcher stall on Market Square in Fayetteville. I call him John Jones, because that wasn't his name; but the story is as true as an "Alfred Dav d, as Rogue Riderhood calls an affidavit in "Our Mutual Friend," by Dickens. Jones was a mulaito, so nearly white that one could not tell the difference on a cloudy day; and, up to the time he was twenty-one years old, his head was as bare of hair as a billiard ball. When he began to get ahead in the world, he became for him from New York a wig, black, glossy and odoriferous, which added greatly to the respectability of his appearance. It was shortly after he bewigged himself that he went away from Fayetteville, and was gone for some years, when he reappeared, to become a meat dealer on Market Square.

John was a good butcher, knowing how to buy cattle, how to slaughter them, and how to cut the beef when killed. He was honest, attentive to business, politic and respectful, and was generally liked. Mr. W. N. Fillinghast, a prominent business man, thought well of John Jenes, and dealt largely with him in obtaining his family supplies of beef.
